Digging into the Old Testament - Pastor Trey

We can often recount all those Old Testament biographies from Sunday School and do so fairly easily. For instance, we remember Jonah as the man who was swallowed by the big fish, Joseph as the man who was wrongfully imprisoned and David as the man who slayed the giant. However, we rarely remember the actual point or message of these portions of our Bible. I think we can see this vividly as we consider our time in Ruth these past few weeks. Ruth is often remembered as a story of great romance, the love story that led to the birth of David. Yet, the point of the book, its message is significantly more important than what it is often remembered for. The point we are to remember will climax this Sunday as we dive into chapter 4; a point that will bring us much more comfort than knowing that a man was willing to marry a great-grandmother of David.

So as we see the climax of Ruth this Sunday, don't be afraid to go back and read those accounts we often take for granted. Go back to Jonah, see if there is more for you to glean than that a man survived being swallowed by a fish. Go back to Joseph and investigate why we are given his history. Go back to David and learn why God used a boy to topple a seemingly invincible foe. Go back to learn why God gave you these particular accounts in Scripture (2 Tim 3:16-17).
